New Christian School Gets 2,500 Applications as Families Flee Public Ed in Droves: 'Once in 100-Years Moment'

Christian schools have been inundated with inquiries, and not just from parents. Teachers want out of public schools too. The overwhelming response mirrors what appears to be a national trend. Nearly two million students left public schools between 2020 and 2021 with large numbers now enrolled in Christian education. Before the pandemic, many Christian schools struggled with low enrollment. Now, there are waiting lists. One of the things that came out of COVID was parents were looking over the shoulder of their kids as they were taking online classes and realizing some of the stuff that's being taught was against their values, even if they weren't Christians. It awakened many people and Christian churches, to recognize that it is our responsibility to provide the Christian education or our children, not the government. The number of homeschoolers has doubled. And new Christian schools are popping up all over the country. With many public schools mired in controversy, interest in Christian education is expected to keep rising.

The Catholic Church was shocked last month when an ornate golden artefact said to contain drops of Jesus's blood was stolen shortly before an annual celebration in northern France.

For 1,000 years, pilgrims have headed to Fécamp abbey in Normandy to worship the "Precious Blood of Christ" relics. Six weeks later, a Dutch art sleuth has described how the relics were handed over to him in an elaborate operation. Arthur Brand says he will now give them to police to return them to the abbey.
